

SUNSET

Just off the of the Santa Monica Pier, two looming arches float above the surface of the water. From afar the structure appears to be static, with only slight movement from the rolling waves. As the hours pass, ferris wheels turn and rollercoasters fly, the structure begins to transform. What was once two arches sitting above the water is now two thin bands sitting on the horizon.